Romesh Gunesekera was born in Sri Lanka in 1954. He moved to the Philippines and from there to Britain in the 1970s. He is the author of eight books of fiction. His first novel Reef was short-listed for the Booker Prize in 1994 and won a Premio Mondello award in Italy. The Sandglass, received BBC’s inaugural Asia Award and Heaven’s Edge, like his collection of stories, Monkfish Moon, was a New York Times Notable Book of the Year. His fourth novel, The Match, was described in the Irish Times as a book that ‘shows why fiction is written—and read’. His novel The Prisoner of Paradise is a story of exiles in Mauritius in the 1820s. His most recent work of fiction Noontide Toll, a collection of linked stories set in post-war Sri Lanka, was short-listed for the 2015 DSC Prize for South Asian Literature. He is also the co-author of the Writers & Artists’ Companion to Novel Writing (2015). He is an elected Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature and has been a judge for a number of literary awards including the Granta list of the Best of Young British Novelists (2013) and the Caine Prize for African Writing. This year he is the chair of the Commonwealth Short Story Prize judging panel.

More at www.romeshg.com

deloughrey@humnet.ucla.edu

Gaurav Desai is Professor of English with a joint appointment in the Program of African and African Diaspora Studies at Tulane University. He is the author of Subject to Colonialism: African Self-fashioning and the Colonial Library (Duke University Press, 2001) and Commerce with the Universe: Africa, India and the Afrasian Imagination (Columbia University Press, 2013) which was a finalist for the Bethwell Ogot Prize offered by the African Studies Association and which won the Rene Wellek Prize awarded by the American Comparative Literature Association. Desai has also edited a number of books and special issues of journals. The book Postcolonialisms: An Anthology of Cultural Theory and Criticism (Rutgers University Press, 2005) has become a standard classroom and reference text.

gaurav@tulane.edu
Bios for speakers

Joshil K. Abraham completed his Masters in English Literature from Pondicherry central University, India, and has taught in colleges in Kerala and Delhi. He worked as Research Assistant in Cinema Studies Department, SAA, Jawaharlal Nehru University, Delhi. He has presented papers in international conferences in the UK and in France. He is part of the AHRC Research Network on ‘Writing, Analysing, Translating Dalit Literature’. He is currently working as an Assistant Professor at G B Pant Engineering College, IP University, Delhi, and is Head of Humanities and Applied Sciences.

joshilkabraham@gmail.com

Vanessa Agard-Jones is Assistant Professor of Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at Yale University, where she teaches courses in transnational gender/sexuality and feminist science studies. Her ethnographic research focuses on the intersections of sexual and environmental politics and their relationship to debates about sovereignty in the (French) Caribbean. Professor Agard-Jones’ work has been published in Small Axe, GLQ, and on the medical anthropology platform Somatosphere. With late historian Manning Marable she is editor of Transnational Blackness: Navigating the Global Color Line. She is currently writing a book about pesticides, (sexual) politics, and postcoloniality in Martinique.

vanessa.agard-jones@yale.edu

Clara Rachel Eybalin Casseus holds a Ph.D. in Political Geography (Université de Poitiers, France), a MPA in Strategic Public Policy (The American University of Paris) and a MA, International Affairs & Sociology (Institut Catholique de Paris). An Independent Researcher affiliated to the Ramphal Institute (London) and a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, her research interest deals with topics on mobility, citizenship and State politics. She regularly intervenes in academic forum in the Gulf region as well as in the Caribbean.

clara.rachel.casseus@univ-poitiers.fr or rceus777@yahoo.fr

avcurrutia@htu.edu

Magali Compan is Associate Professor of French and Francophone Studies at the College of William and Mary, in Virginia, USA. She received her Ph.D. in French from the University of Michigan. Her current research focuses on the Francophone Indian Ocean. She is the co-author of ‘Land and Landscapes in Francographic Literature: Remapping Uncertain Territories’ and has published articles on Ananda Devi, Shenaz Patel, Nathacha Appanah, Jacques Rabemananjara, and Jean-Luc Raharimanana.

mxcomp@wm.edu
Anny-Dominique Curtius is Associate Professor of Francophone Studies in the Department of French and Italian at the University of Iowa. She is also the Director of the Working Group ‘Circulating Cultures’ at the Obermann Center for Advanced Studies, and the Co-Director of the Caribbean, Diaspora, and Atlantic Studies Program. Her research lies at the crossroads of Francophone Studies (Caribbean, Sub-Saharan Africa, and the Indian Ocean), postcolonial ecology, comparative Caribbean critical theory and cultural studies, cinematic and performing arts, and cultural anthropology. She is the author of Symbioses d’une mémoire: Manifestations religieuses et littératures de la Caraïbe (2006), and has published extensively on affect, symbolic defacements of monuments and acts of memory, entangled transculturalities, migrations, and the poetics and practices of creolization. Her second book in progress is entitled Unveiling the Camouflage: Suzanne Césaire’s Caribbean Ecopoetics.

anny-curtius@uiowa.edu

Asis De is an Assistant Professor and Head of the Department of English Language and Literature, Mahishadal Raj College (Govt. Sponsored), West Bengal, India. Both his M. Phil and Ph.D dissertations are in the area of Anglophone Postcolonial Literatures. His research interests include the study of Identity negotiation in newer/ diasporic cultural spaces, transculturality in postcolonial literatures, Indian Dalit and Tribal literature. In a number of publications and conference presentations in India and in Europe (Belgium, Germany and England), he has worked on the issues of cultural identity and transnationalism in Asian, Caribbean and African fictional narratives. He also teaches Anglophone Postcolonial Literatures and Diasporic Literatures in two Universities in India as Guest Faculty. He is a member of some eminent research organizations like ASNEL, PSA, EACLALS and IACLALS.

ademrc@gmail.com

Jill Didur is an Associate Professor and Chair of the Department of English at Concordia University, Montreal. She is the author of Unsettling Partition: Literature, Gender, Memory (UTP 2006), and co-editor of Global Ecologies and the Environmental Humanities: Postcolonial Approaches (Routledge 2015). She is also co-editor of special issues of Cultural Critique on Critical Posthumanism (2003) and Cultural Studies on Revisiting the Subaltern in the New Empire (2003), and completing a book about imperialism, gardening, and the environment in postcolonial literature.

caroline.durand-rous@laposte.net
Kathleen Flanagan teaches in the Department of English and Comparative Literature at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She has published articles on various topics in postcolonial literature, especially from Asia and Oceania. She has examined the reactions in Tongan fiction to transnational forces of international aid agencies and political movements. She is particularly interested in literature from current and former United States territories in the Pacific. She has written about representations of U.S. nuclear testing in the Marshall Islands, and about the differing epistemologies of relationships in Palauan and American culture. She is currently writing a study of traders and markets in Oceania as a locus of theories of exchange and relationships in the West and in the Pacific. She is also working on studies of the changing political and cultural relationships between the United States and nations in Micronesia.

ktflanag@email.unc.edu

Claire Gallien lectures in the English Department at Université Paul-Valéry Montpellier. She published L’Orient anglais (Oxford: SVEC) in 2011 and works on early-modern and Enlightenment orientalism, as well as contemporary Arab literature in English. Her research interests cover issues and texts related to orientalism and neo-orientalism, as well as postcolonial, Global, Comparative, and translation studies.

claire.gallien@gmail.com

Wendy Harding is Professor of English and American Literature at the University of Toulouse. Her most recent book, The Myth of Emptiness in American Literature of Place is forthcoming with Iowa U.P. Jacky Martin is Emeritus Professor at the Université Paul-Valéry Montpellier. His publications focus on translation and discourse theory as well as literature and ecocriticism. Harding and Martin have coauthored numerous articles and published two books, one on Toni Morrison and the other on contemporary American poetry and short fiction.

harding@univ-tlse2.fr

John C. Hawley is Professor and past chairman of the English Department at Santa Clara University. He is currently a Fulbright Fellow at Humboldt University in Berlin, working on the literature of migration, and is a former resident at the Rockefeller Research Center in Bellagio. He has served on four executive committees of the Modern Language Association, and is author or editor of 15 books. He is past president of the US chapter of the Association for Commonwealth Literature and Language Studies.

jhawley@scu.edu

Charles Joseph’s researches are focused on the territory of Los Angeles and Southern California, its history, its culture, its singular operating mechanisms as well as the different levels of influence that such an iconic place is able to produce. He has completed his PhD at the Université du Maine, entitled ‘Being and writing (from) Los Angeles: Wanda Coleman’ this work is situated at one of the many converging points between literature and territoriality and examines the complex and evolving relationship between the work of the African-American author and the city that harbored her birth, life and death. He is, for the time being, an assistant professor at the University of Angers, France.

charlesjoseph@outlook.fr

Gohar Khan has completed her PhD at the University of Warwick, entitled ‘Narrating Pakistan Transnationally: Identity, Politics and Terrorism in Anglophone Pakistani Literature after 9/11’. As part of her research, she has presented her work at several international conferences and has published articles in academic journals on the work of Kamila Shamsie and Mohsin Hamid. She has taught English Literature for five years.

goharkarimkhan1@gmail.com
Marie Kruger is an Associate Professor in the English Department at the University of Iowa where she teaches courses in postcolonial and cultural studies. Her book Women’s Literature in Kenya and Uganda: The Trouble with Modernity (Palgrave, 2011) examines the relationship between modernity, gender and the complex cultural and political networks in Eastern Africa. Her work has been published in US-American, German, and Kenyan literary journals, including Research in African Literatures, Postcolonial Text, Swahili Forum and The Nairobi Journal of Literature. In her current project ('Therapeutic Commodities: Apartheid, Trauma and Visual Culture in the New South Africa'), she studies the representation and commodification of traumatic memory in South African visual culture, including film and memorial sites.

marie-kruger@uiowa.edu

Megan C. MacDonald is Assistant Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Koç University in Istanbul. Her current research interests include francophone literatures from the Mediterranean, feminist theory and representation, and Anglophone literatures from South Asia. She has published articles in journals such as the International Journal of Francophone Studies, Contemporary French and Francophone Studies, and Francospheres. A recent chapter on the politics of hijab in Europe and North America appeared in the Routledge collection Muslim Women, Transnational Feminism and the Ethics of Pedagogy: Contested Imaginaries in Post-9/11 Cultural Practice (2014).

mmacdonald@ku.edu.tr

Bénédicte Meillon is Associate Professor at the University of Perpignan, where she teaches translation and literature. She is a member of the VECT (Voyages, Exchanges, Confrontations, Transformations). She wrote her PhD on Barbara Kingsolver’s short stories. She has published articles on Barbara Kingsolver’s work, Roald Dahl’s short stories, Paul Auster’s and Annie Proulx’s fiction. She has specialized in the short story genre and in North American literature, with a deep interest in the postmodernist rewriting of myths, folk and fairy tales, in the representation of Nature and minorities, and in the use of magical realism in contemporary North American writing.

benemeillon@gmail.com

Simanique Moody is an Assistant Professor at Leiden University. She teaches in the Leiden University Centre for Linguistics and the Bachelor of International Studies programme. Simanique is a sociolinguist and a creolist whose current research examines regional variation in African American English and Geechee/Gullah and the historical relationship between these two varieties. Her other scholarly interests include language contact, language change, language and ethnicity, and language and culture in the African Diaspora.

s.moody@hum.leidenuniv.nl

Aparajita Nanda, recipient of a Fulbright faculty teaching scholarship and a Visiting Associate Professorship to the departments of English and African American Studies, UC Berkeley, has taught at Jadavpur University, India and now teaches both at UC Berkeley and Santa Clara University. Her most recent publications include her books, Romancing the Strange, Black California, The Strangled Cry, and articles in Ariel and Callaloo. Her forthcoming book publications include Ethnic Literatures and Transnationalism: Critical Imaginaries for a Global World, part of the Routledge series, Transnational Perspectives on American Literature. Also forthcoming are her chapter on California literature with Cambridge University Press and an article on Octavia Butler in the MLA publication, Approaches to Teaching Octavia E. Butler in the Academy.

aparananda@berkeley.edu
Eunice Ngongkum is an Associate Professor of African Literature, Culture and Ecocriticism in the Department of African Literature and Civilization of the University of Yaounde 1, Cameroon. She is presently a Humboldt Scholar at the Bayreuth Institute for American Studies (BIFAS) of the University of Bayreuth in Germany. Her research interests include African literature, culture, ecoculture and theory. Her current project is on ecocritical perspectives in Anglophone Cameroon Writing.

eunicengongkum@yahoo.com

Michael Paye is a PhD student of the School of English, University College Dublin under the supervision of Dr Sharae Deckard. His project is entitled 'World-Ecological Crises in Circum-Atlantic Fishing Communities: Realism, Regionalism, and World-Literature'. Focusing on the literary depiction of local fishing communities whose regions are 'incorporated into the world economy' (Wallerstein, World Systems Analysis; 2004), the project seeks to chart aesthetic responses to the same but differently articulated socioecological crises in literatures across the long 19th and long 20th centuries. Michael has been awarded the Irish Research Council Postgraduate Scholarship for his PhD research project (2013-15), and has been the recipient of numerous funding strands and grants for conference organisation. He is also the Postgraduate representative of ASLE-UKI (2013-15) and was awarded the ASLE-UK international studentship in 2013. Most recently, he co-organised the ASLE-UKI biennial postgraduate conference, UCD, 30-31 July 2014.

Michael.Paye@gmail.com

Anna Pehkoranta is a postdoctoral researcher at the Department of Art and Culture Studies, University of Jyväskylä, Finland. Her doctoral dissertation investigates melancholia, ethics, and aesthetics in selected works by Chuang Hua, Maxine Hong Kingston, and Fae Myenne Ng. She specializes in Asian American literature, but her research interests also include other American ethnic minority literatures, transnational and postcolonial fiction and theory, as well as ecocritical, feminist, and psychoanalytical literary criticism. In her recent articles and conference papers, she has examined topics related to these areas of research with an emphasis on Chinese American women’s fiction. Her current research project explores literary form and affective investment in contemporary experimental and transgressive Asian American literature.

anna.m.pehkoranta@jyu.fi

Luca Raimondi holds a PhD in Modern, Comparative and Postcolonial Literatures from the University of Bologna (Italy). He has been visiting researcher at Boston University and Brown University, and is now Adjunct Professor at Fondazione Scuole Civiche Milano. His areas of interest include geocriticism; Victorian studies; the Indian English novel; colonial and postcolonial history of South Asia. His present research focuses on the literary construction of a transnational Indian Ocean space. He has published essays on Edward Said, R.K. Narayan, Amitav Ghosh, and the relation between geocriticism, ecocriticism and postcolonial studies. He is a member of the editorial team and translator for Between, Journal of the Italian Association for the Theory and Comparative History of Literature.

luca.raimondi8@unibo.it Srilata Ravi is Professor of French at the University of Alberta and Honorary Research Fellow in the School of Humanities at the University of Western Australia. Her research interests are in Comparative literary and cultural studies; Francophone postcolonial studies and Indian Ocean studies. Srilata Ravi is the author of Autour de l’œuvre de Gérard Bouchard. Histoire sociale, sociologie historique, imaginaires collectifs et politiques publiques (2015 co-edited with Claude Couture); Rethinking Global Mauritius: Critical Essays on Mauritian Literatures and Cultures (2013); Rainbow Colors-Literary Ethno-topographies of Mauritius (2007); Ecritures mauriciennes au féminin: penser l’allérité (2011, co-edited with Véronique Bragard); Asia in Europe, Europe in Asia (2004 co-edited with Mario Rutten and Beng Lan Goh).

srilata@ualberta.ca

Yvonne Reddick read English at Cambridge, where she worked with the environmental aesthetics expert and bestselling author, Dr. Robert Macfarlane. She moved to the University of Warwick to work with Prof. Jonathan Bate, a leader in the field of British environmental literary criticism. She began her career with an Early Career Fellowship at Warwick, and later took up a Research Fellowship at the University of Central Lancashire, where she is currently based at the Institute for Black Atlantic Research. She also holds visiting research positions at the Universities of Cambridge and Liverpool. Yvonne’s research has recently focused on British environmental writing, especially the work of Ted Hughes. Her first monograph, on Hughes’s eco-poetry, is under review by Oxford University Press. Yvonne’s latest research project examines English and French-language literature from Africa. She is examining Africa’s rivers as sites of environmental conflict, in writing from the twentieth century to the present.

Yreddick@uclan.ac.uk

Sabine Sielke is Chair of North American Literature and Culture, Director of the North American Studies Program and the German-Canadian Centre, and Spokesperson of the Zentrum für Kulturwissenschaft | Cultural Studies at the University of Bonn. Her publications include Reading Rape (Princeton 2002) and Fashioning the Female Subject (Ann Arbor 1997), the series Transcription, more than a dozen (co-)editions, most recently, American Studies Today: New Research Agendas (2014) and Beyond 9/11: Transdisciplinary Perspectives on Twenty-First Century U.S. American Culture (2013), and more than 100 essays on North American literature and culture, literary and cultural theory, gender and African American studies, and the interfaces of cultural studies and the sciences. Her current book project interrogates memory, mediation, and seriality at the crossroads of the cognitive sciences and cultural studies. She has initiated collaborative projects on knowledge ecologies North America, on nostalgia, on mimicry as communication, and on the nexus of violence and security.

ssielke@nap-uni-bonn.de

Frederick Staidum Jr is currently a Consortium for Faculty Diversity Fellow of English and Africana Studies at Muhlenberg College, Allentown, PA. He is also a doctoral candidate in the Department of African American Studies at Northwestern University, where he is finalizing his dissertation, ‘Locating New Orleans: Race, Sexuality, and Geographies of Difference in the American Imaginary, 1803-1903’, under the direction of Michelle M. Wright. His work explores the racial and sexual representations of ‘New Orleans’ across nineteenth-century literature and visual culture and explains the way in which the city has been situated as an American exotic. He holds a Master of Arts from Northwestern and a Master of Professional Studies from Cornell University in African American Studies and Africana Studies, respectively. His primary fields are African American Literature and Cultural Studies, but his interests extend to the African diaspora, the Gothic, queer theory, visual studies, postcolonial studies, and cultural geography.

fstaidum@muhlenberg.edu
Christos Theofilogiannakos is a Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of History at the University of California, San Diego where he is working on his dissertation titled, ‘The Perennial Periphery: Culture, Identity and Politics on the Ionian Islands in the Long Nineteenth Century’, under the supervision of Thomas Gallant. His work is an intellectual survey focusing on how 'western' ideas were eventually adopted, and modulated in Eastern Europe and the Mediterranean. Christos has completed his undergraduate studies in Classical Studies and his Master of History at York University, Toronto. In 2008, he received a scholarship to study at the School of Modern Greek Language at the Aristotle University in Thessaloniki. In 2011, he won a fellowship from the Alexander S. Onassis Public Benefit Foundation to conduct research in Athens and Corfu. Specializing in 19th century Mediterranean and Greek history his research interests also include late Ottoman history, and borderland studies.

ctheofil@ucsd.edu